Music in the early 1950s was much like the 1940s: crooners everywhere. And that's not a bad thing, but apparently the kids thought it was. By the mid-1950s Elvis Presley's new style, a sound that upset a LOT of parents, caught on like wildfire. Don't believe me? Look at the charts. Elvis completely dominated the late fifties.

The 1950s: American Pop Culture History - RetroWaste

The fiercest cultural rivalry of the 1950s was between the established film industry and the emerging medium of television. Film had been a central part of American life for three decades, but the experimental beginnings of television between 1928 and 1947 did little to suggest the dramatic impact it was to have by mid-century.
