(If you would like to read the argument, it is " The Problem of Evil " from the book " Problems from Philosophy " by James Rachels.) I actually disagree with a lot of what the author, whom I assume is speaking from most mainstream atheistic or at least agnostic philosophers points of view, has to say about Evil, and the acceptance of even the Idea of God.

An Exposition on James Rachels: " Does Morality Depend on Religion? ". James Rachels argues that morality and religion are separate entities. He states that " morality is a matter of reason and conscience, not religious faith " and that " right and wrong are not defined in terms of God ' s will. " i He uses the Divine Command Theory, the Theory of Natural Law, and the use of religious scripture and tradition to establish how and where the two subjects are separated.
