That being said, I will offer a few observations on operating the "Flagship" combines (that's what CaseIH calls their 7010/8010/7120/8120/9120 combines) as compared to the older Axial-Flows. The #1 thing is that the Flagship combines do NOT have a cleaning system that will bail you out of a poor threshing setup like the old AFs will.

Talked to my local dealer today about our 8010 combine. I told them we would like to get our 2388 back, get a brand new 8010 with all the updates, or get all the updates on our current 8010 and another year warranty to take us through next years corn, milo, and sunflower harvest. I don't care which option they choose.

I know this is a marketing forum but there just isn't enough action on the machinery site. I know this bugs some of you so my apologies in advance. We bought an 2004 8010 at the last Ritchie Bros auction. It turned out to be a great combine for our relatively small acres except for the fact that the rad needs blowing out 2-3 times per day or more if wind and chaff conditions are bad.
