Dynamical Systems In Social Psychology

Dynamical systems theory (also known as dynamic systems theory or just systems theory) is a series of principles and tools for studying change. It is based on concepts from mathematics and is a general approach applicable to almost any phenomenon. There are two types of change that are central to this method.

A dynamical system has a state determined by a collection of real numbers, or more generally by a set of points in an appropriate state space. Small changes in the state of the system correspond to small changes in the numbers. The numbers are also the coordinates of a geometrical space—a manifold.

Dynamic systems theory addresses the process of change and development, rather than developmental outcomes; in dynamic systems terms, there is no end point of development (Thelen & Ulrich, 1991). Moreover, with its central focus on change and change in the rate of change, dynamic systems theory points to questions about both (a) change from one time point to the next; and (b) overall patterns of change.

Dynamical Systems In Social Psychology

A dynamical system is a manifold  $M$  called the phase (or state) space and a smooth evolution function  $f_t$  that for any element of  $t \in T$ , the time, maps a point of the phase space back into the phase space. The notion of smoothness changes with applications and the type of manifold.

Current research projects include the use of cellular automata to simulate the emergence and maintenance of self-concept and linear and non-linear scenarios of societal change, the use of attractor neural networks to model interpersonal and group dynamics, and the use of coupled dynamical systems to simulate the emergence of personality through social coordination.
