The information used to create the late-fourth-century Easter Letter, which declared accepted Christian writings, was probably based on the Ecclesiastical History [HE] of Eusebius of Caesarea, wherein he uses the information passed on to him by Origen to create both his list at HE 3:25 and Origen's list at HE 6:25. Eusebius got his information about what texts were accepted by the third-century churches throughout the known world, a great deal of which Origen knew of firsthand from his ...

For a general introduction to Eusebius and the Ecclesiastical History, please see the commentary on I.6.6-11. The present passage offers Eusebius's account of the martyrdom of James, the brother of Jesus, for which he draws on various other sources. Rather than focusing on the details of the martyrdom story itself, however, what is more pertinent for our discussion is the significance of it in Eusebius's mind for the fate of the Jews at the hands of the emperor Vespasian.
