Designed for students without a strong background in history, Making Europe is organized around a political chronology to help inexperienced students get a sense of the story of western civilization. Themes of religion, social history, biography and personality, and individual and collective identity enable students to grasp the "big picture."

Cover of Houghton Mifflin textbook on European history

The worst part of this book is the cover. Why would Kidner et. al. think that making a black man the visage of a book titled "Making Europe" a good idea? There has to be some limit to political correctness and Kidner flew by that limit. While it contains a reasonable account of European history, this book is as dry as a textbook can be.
