School Standards And Framework Bill - Hansard

§ The School Standards and Framework Bill introduces at least 10—there may be more—new powers for the Secretary of State to make guidance to which most education authorities, schools and other bodies must have regard. Of the amendments we are considering tonight, Amendments Nos. 187 and 188 deal with home-school agreements, Amendments Nos. 192, 193 and 194 are concerned with early years development plans and Amendments Nos. 220 and 221 refer to behaviour support plans.

School Standards and Framework Bill (Hansard, 8 June 1998)

These amendments are deliberately designed to make more specific and more precise the exact manner in which the education development plans prepared by each school and each local authority will—and I refer to a later phrase in the clause—"raise the standards of education". The Bill is entirely about raising the standards of British education throughout the system.

Lords Amendments to the School Standards and Framework Bill

The government went into election with the priority of education, education, education, and promised to raise standards in schools. So educational reform is central to its welfare to work agenda, both as a means of improving young people's employability, and also through raising school achievement enabling the UK to compete more successfully in the global economy.
