Molecular imaging techniques targeting activated macrophages, neovascularization, or increased cellular metabolic activity can represent effective means of non-invasive detection of vascular inflammation. In the present review, novel non-invasive imaging tools that have been successfully tested in humans will be presented.

Non-Invasive Imaging of Vascular Inflammation

Non-invasive vascular studies intend to evaluate the health of arteries and veins by utilizing advanced technologies like imaging, ultrasound and several other techniques. These techniques assess the functional aspects of the blood vessels and the procedures followed are painless, safe and healthy.
