this book When giving a reading in front of folks I needed a larger print version of my books for several reasons - first of the major reasons is the preference in some venues for subdued lighting (largely because lighting costs money, and poetry is notorious for not being surrounded by that entity) - and second, of course, my aging eyes. A more minor, but equally important reason was simply trying to juggle a whole stack of little books at the same time. Very boring, and to some even pretentious. Each time a new book came out, I would

Online Library

The Big Blue

take it to a Xerox shop and have them enlarge the pages 150%, hole punch them, and then place them in a big blue binder. My thought is, a poet giving a reading is a performer, and as a performer my major contribution to the evening is to keep the audience happy. So, if Someone called out for me to read one of my obscure poems (one I had simply not thought of for awhile) from one of my older books, I would have it handy. At readings recently I've been asked when I was going to put out a "collected poems" book. In 2015 'selected poems' came out, and I had felt that's all anyone would ever need; so I would joke around -

I'm not dead yet.

When talking with one of my editors the same subject came up, but I was able to deflect because I had several more books I was working on.

More recently at a reading a person with me after the reading and I had left the big blue binder and gasped - "I love it

- I can see the words
without straining!
Can you give me a
