look what we built. I can't believe I didn't share this earlier. This one was the easiest project ever. We built the headboard over the summer. We took a 2 2x2's, plywood measured to match our bed width. Stuck them together with brackets, then wrapped it with foam and a blue-grey linen just like a present. Added a nice line of brass trim ...

Sweden uses offsite manufacture to build at least 45% of its new homes. If the UK could emulate this approach - making use of modern techniques that allow homes to be built faster and with fewer skilled workers - it could finally overcome its huge housing shortfall. Are we approaching a tipping point where this could really happen?
