Narrative intervention uses an authentic, functional context, which entails the formation of a genuine connection between adult and child, where meaningful information is conveyed, and language processing, pragmatics, and social-emotional learning are integrated (Brinton & Fujiki, 2019). The natural environment (i.e., peer and adult attention) can maintain children's efforts to tell stories and, by doing so, provide additional opportunities for practicing the newly acquired language skills.

In The Great Gatsby, Fitzgerald's main innovation was to introduce a first person narrator and protagonist whose consciousness filters the story's events. This device was not a total invention since a character through whose eyes and mind the central protagonist is discovered is to be found in two of Conrad's books: Heart of Darkness and Lord Jim .
